"The fabric of which this world is made is ever passing away, like a stream of water, drops are running away and others are following after, keeping the river still full, but always changing in its elements. But God is perpetually the same. He is not composed of any substance or material, but is spirit - pure, essential, and ethereal spirit - and therefore he is immutable. He remains everlastingly the same. There are no furrows on his eternal brow. No age hath palsied him; no years have marked him with the mementoes of their flight; he sees ages pass, but with him it is ever now. He is the great I AM - the Great Unchangeable.

Richard D. Phillip's thoughts on today's text, Hebrews 1:10-14...

Psalms 110 is the most frequently quoted psalm in the New Testament, because of what it tells us about where Christ went when he departed this earth in glory, and what he is doing now. The imagery of him seated comes from the oriental court, where the king sat upon his throne while his vassals and servants stood before him to show their deference and his supremacy. This is the picture the Bible gives us of God's throne room in passages like Revelation 7, where the angels and elders and living creatures stand before the enthroned sovereign God, worshiping him and ready to do his will. To be told, "Sit at my right hand," signifies a singular honor and dignity. It shows rank and power and authority in the kingdom. The fact that Jesus is seated on the throne of God does not mean that he is inactive. Rather, he is attentively concerned with the affairs of his flock. Being seated, he wields authority over and for the sake of the church.
